Being a leader is more than being in charge and bossing people around. A leader does more than that, at times it need to take charge but not justing bossing people around a leader helps other of a team, organization, place, Dojo, etc. A good leader is a role model, and people should look up to him not just for ~~what~~ he says but of his Action and good deeds. If you ~~are~~ honored to be a leader you have to be doing whats right and helping others but not for the praises and glory but because he know that doing the right thing is a good reward itself. Being a leader has great responsibility and when you are a leader people look up to you so you have to be a role model for others and don't screw around, because if the see a leader playing around and not following directions then other people will thinks its okay to goof off and not follow directions. But if a leader follows directions and does whats right other people start doing the same and follow the leader.

Being a leader in life has many meanings but it all needs good character, self-discipline, being able to follow directions and help others. A leader is willing to take charge with responsibility. That means that at times you can be in charge without bossing people around. A leader takes care of everyone in the group, organization, Dojo, etc. When you care of the people in a group or team and lead them to the right path. A good leader should set an example for others to follow and not goof off and disobey. A leader at the Dojo should be able to follow directions the first time, take initiative or be able to do things without being asked. A leader at the Dojo should not goof off but be a role model. People should say that a leader is being helpful or doing the right thing. A leader at the Dojo should be a good example to follow and all the kids should say I want to be like that leader because he is a good karate student, a great role model, etc. A leader at the Dojo and in life should be able to follow and give directions with discipline and responsibility.
